Gestational Age at Birth:
23 weeks and 3 days

Weight:
710 grams

Time In NICU:
137 days

Proudest Moment (NICU):
After 71 days on both the conventional and oscillating ventilation, four failed attempts, an endoscope, endless medications, steroids, doctors whispering about a tracheostomy, Lakai extubated to CPAP!

Coming Soon: Check www.PreemieWorld.com to read how Lakai is doing now.

Parent Tip:

Reach out and connect to other preemie parents, especially to ones in similar situations to yours who have preemies who are out of the NICU and growing up. Doctors can only tell you so much about the future.

Advocate: NICU Awareness Month

Do you work in a NICU or had a baby in the NICU? Not many people understand what a Neonatal Intensive Care Unit is and how it is important to honor the patients, the caregivers and the staff members of this special unit. Project Sweet Peas has created Neonatal Intensive Care Awareness Month for September. Check out more here, pass it on: <http://www.nicuawareness.org>

FREE: NICU Nurses Day (9/15/15) Logo

PreemieWorld provides a number of free handouts to be used in the NICU and beyond in its "Freebies For You" section of the website.

This month's freebie is another preemie symbol: NICU Nurses are Angels. "As September is celebrating Neonatal Nurses, we wanted to give NICU Nurses special recognition. They have hard jobs that not only involve technical expertise but also help to promote the parent/infant bond. They take real ownership of their jobs," notes PreemieWorld's Deb Discenza. "It is because of the love and trust of these dedicated nurses that parents can step away for a bit for a bite to eat, go home to sleep and more."

Preemie Terms: NICU

Neonatal Intensive Care Unit (NICU) (aka Special Care Baby Unit/SCBU):

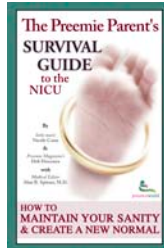

Area of the hospital in which your Preemie will be staying until Discharge Day. Levels of care are distinguished by specialty. All hospitals have variations on their NICU classifications, but generally they fall in one of three "level" categories:

Level I: Support fairly uncomplicated late pre-term births from 35 weeks and up.

Level II: Support births from 32 weeks up and do not require high maintenance care. This hospital will usually have a neonatologist on staff and a nursery devoted to NICU infants.

Level III: Supports full-on NICU with neonatologists, neonatal nurses, and respiratory therapists. Handles the most severe cases of prematurity and those that may require surgery.

Owlet Baby Vitals Monitor

Didn't get discharged from the NICU with a monitor and freaked out? The Owlet Baby Vitals Monitor is a consumer-grade product that can help.

With a simple device placed in a lightweight but durable and snug baby-sock (with larger socks included in the set to accommodate growth), parents can check on their infant's heart rate and oxygen level in real-time using the Owlet app and receive alerts. The Owlet's base unit is multi-functional as an in-room charging unit, a color-coded notifier of the baby's overall status and a day/night light. A must-have for preemies!

After the NICU: Visiting the Nurses

Discharge from the NICU is a huge relief, but you will find that you'll want to go back and visit the nurses. Ideas for all budgets:

- Cake! Bring them a cake for either the calendar age birthday or the adjusted age birthday, your pick! The team loves treats!
- Not a baker? Bring them a care package full of snacks and a love note from your preemie along with a current picture.
- Clothes! Have some old preemie clothes to give away? Donate them to the unit. Both the nurses and their families will be grateful.
- The idea of going near the NICU makes you nervous? Mail a love note with a current picture of your baby now. Even better print out our logo on p. 1 and write a special note on it.

Tip: NICU Nurses Are Angels (Part VI)

They say hindsight is 20/20 and that is so true. Deb Discenza, Publisher at PremieWorld, in this sixth installment, gives insight into what she believes Premie Parents in the NICU right now should know for sure about preemie resiliency:

It is Neonatal Nurses Month and parents should know that this event includes the NICU Nurses caring for their infants.

While nurses are highly skilled professionals in neonatal care, they also work hard to bridge the gap between parents and professionals. Their caring spirit takes their expertise to a whole new level, often lending an ear to us parents as we work through diagnoses, our agonies and our worst fears about our babies' prognoses. They are there when things are low and also there when moments are celebrated. The first hold, the first stabilization off the ventilator, and ultimately discharge day are all moments that NICU Nurses know are precious and important. And when a baby passes away, that is when a NICU Nurse is there to comfort families and create memories that will be consoling later on. Take time to thank your NICU Nurses!
